CHIEF EDITOR'S DESK

I am elated to see BALANCE, the International Multidisciplinary Law Journal, Volume 2, and Second Issue taking shape and seeing the light of the day. I am also excited and thankful to the contributors from India and abroad, and the members of the editorial board who made this happen.

Law and legal profession has a lot of responsibility to our society, especially in the wake of complex scientific, social, economic and political changes and developments affecting human relationships. But, the acceptance of inter- and multidisciplinary proved to be drastically more difficult in Jurisprudence (as in the humanities in general) than in the natural sciences. Thus, Law and legal profession has a lot of responsibility to our society, especially in the wake of complex scientific, social, economic and political changes and developments affecting human relationships. Earlier, law was everywhere affecting the whole society as it passed through various human activities. Now, it can be said that the solution to problems related to law can only be multidisciplinary research in the field of law. For example, study of criminology deals with the nature of crime, and man as a criminal vis-a-vis other factors. Here, the prime thrust apart from other things, is man because man would be studied in relation to its society. For a complete study of the reasons behind becoming a criminal, the help of psychology, psychiatry, sociology and the environment in which man has been brought up and is at present living, has to be taken

We are fortunate to have seven papers on multiple disciplines for the second issue from second volume containing reviews and reflections from disciplines of medicine, political science, environment, crime, and traditional knowledge interlacing with law.

I hope our objective shall fetch good research contributions from different professionals from different disciplines and help the journal go a long way showing light to the world.
